“While we did not have the wild success of previous years, we had a good year,” said CEO Bill Missler, who co-founded Missler Software in 2003. “Last year, we were performing at 100% capacity for most of the year and did not grow our backlog significantly.” “The year started on an exciting note for me when I saw a Google App Engine beta project hit $300,000 in gross revenue,” Missler told Tech Republic. “Of course, I have no idea what a single project did with that amount of revenue, but it seemed very realistic. At the end of the year I had one client with $1 million in revenue.” While enterprise software is typically the domain of large companies, the startup Missler Software has evolved to serve a market as varied as the consumer space. The company now supports more than 500 customers in 33 different countries, including top companies like Google, Cisco, Fidelity Investments, and M&T Bank. “2012 was a great year for us,” said Bill Missler. “We moved from a New York State to a New York City address, became profitable, increased our head count, became profitable with recurring revenue and were recognized in the New York City technology scene.” “2011 saw us meet the same goals,” Bill continued. “We had many local awards for best SaaS, best product, best company. And we also had the first grant to a company in New York City from the NY Tech Meetup.” New York technology award nods As technology’s growing impact on society has come to the forefront in New York City, Missler Software’s decisions have brought the company some attention from the city’s tech communities. Missler Software was recognized as “Best Startup in NYC” at the New York Tech Meetup’s Startup Awards in February. In October, Missler Software also won the “Best Product” award at the StartUp Grind hackathon. “One of the most important ways that we help entrepreneurs is by developing software that can replace jobs or help their business,” said Missler. “When we can do this, then we help both the business and the employees. We are also flexible in our approach. We don’t think of ourselves as being in the B2B or B 82157476af
